Background:
The latest numbers from Global Findex, a comprehensive database on financial inclusion from the World Bank Group, reveal that while more than 700 million people gained access to formal financial services between 2011 and 2014, the gender gap in financial inclusion remains a stark reality with women in emerging economies having a 20% less likely of having a bank account than men and 17% less likely to have borrowed formally.

Studies also show that women in rural areas tend to be less educated and less likely to be formally employed. The lack of financial inclusion makes it harder for women, especially in rural areas, where in many households she is the sole income earner or the main income earner, to save for the future and borrow the necessary funds to grow her business, send her children to school and own assets.

Objective of the Event:
The objectives of the panel, organized by the NGO Committee on Financing for Development and the NGO Committee on Social Development in collaboration with the Virginia Gildersleeve International Fund, is to generate substantive discussions around the topic of financial inclusion as a tool for women’s empowerment and poverty eradication.
